

Watercolor Project: Hummingbird Landing (Birds in Watercolor Book 101)

Hummingbirds are so much fun to paint in watercolor! In this step-by-step project, you will practice my Wet-Into-Wet technique, where you move the paper to create transparency of color on the feathers and flower petals. To create depth, you will use a method called Pixeling, where you use an embossing tool to wick dots of color on the birds body. To depict the illumination of the birds feathers, adding a little iridescent watercolor medium to your paint makes the painting unique! Here is a preview of the project steps: PREPARE YOUR PAPER AND THE PAINT

1. Tape the outline on a light table or window. Tape the watercolor paper on top, rough side up. Using a 5ml mechanical pencil, lightly outline the squirrel on the watercolor paper.
2. On a white 8 ceramic tile, mix separate puddles of paint, about 1 in diameter of every color. Keep them separate. Make each puddle as thick as heavy cream. Add a little Iridescent Watercolor Medium to each puddle. Not much! It goes a long way!
3. WET-INTO-WET TECHNIQUE
3. Paint water in one feather shape. The water in the shape should be a sheen with a small drop of water that moves around the shape.
4. Wick PG into the water near the birds body, then pick up the paper and use gravity to move the color in the drop down to a corner of the feather shape. Move the drop back to the body and place the paper back on the table.
5. Wick a little T into the drop, then use gravity to move the color in the drop down to the same corner of the feather shape, then back towards the body of the bird. Place the paper back on the table. The paint will keep moving in the water till it dries, so do not try to manipulate where the color goes. Let the paint do its own thing. It is our human nature to move the drop back and forth again and again. You are only moving it twice. Once for each color. If you keep moving it, the feather will be one color and opaque.
