

Wooden Boats: Relics of the past

In 2014 I produced a series of fifteen paintings of wooden boats found in Newfoundland and Labrador. This book was created to provide insight into the work process behind the series and information on the types of boats and their uses through working sketches, studies and in progress views of paintings as well as the final pieces. Traditional construction of wooden boats, like many handcrafts, is a declining industry with just a few people left in the province who practice the craft and share the techniques with others. Finding wooden boats on the water is more by chance than common occurrence. The vessels are quickly being replaced by fibreglass as a lighter, lower maintenance option. Motors have all but replaced human power in propulsion. Since the cod moratorium in 1992, the fishery is a ghost of itself and rural areas with no fishery income show the impact of that loss. This book provides a glimpse into my search for wooden boats and the process of documenting them in paint. I went looking for boats. What I found was a window to the past.
